Continuation of 3. NOTE: The newly added language regarding a particulate medium does not appear to be clearly supported by the specification as filed since the specification describes only particulate amino acids and not a particulate medium per se, thus, it is uncertain that the new language has support and may be new matter. Also upon an updated search of the newly proposed claims there were several references which may indicate an additional consideration of the newly proposed claim language over new art. (Applicants may note the updated search history print out in PAIR if so desired). A more detailed search and consideration of the newly proposed claims are presented after final of which will present new issues after final and so the after final amendments to not put the case into condition for allowance and will, therefore, not be entered.

ATTACHMENT A

The arguments regarding a particulate medium are noted but because the claims' amendments after final are not being entered these arguments are considered moot. Rodriquez does teach amino acids in lyophilized form of which the claims of record do read on. The language of claim 1 merely reads on a medium or composition that contains amino acids in lyophilized form. The medium or composition is disclosed by the cited prior art of record. Also the medium or composition of Rodriquez does teach the presence of non-protein amino acid, note Table 2, and no where does the reference disclose the presence of human or animal substances. However, such language is in the preamble and is not necessarily given any patentable weight since it is not a positive recitation within the body of the claim itself.

Therefore, in response to Applicants' argument regarding the preamble and patent law: the determination of whether a preamble limits a claim is made on a case-by-case basis in light of the facts in each case; there is no litmus test defining when a preamble limits the scope of a claim. Catalina Mktg. Int 'I v. Coolsavings.com, Inc., 289 F.3d 801, 808, 62 USPQ2d 1781, 1785 (Fed. Cir. 2002). It is clear also from the record that secondary references applied in the 35 USC 103 ground of rejection do clearly teach dried medium as useful for culturing mites and hence to select for a dry medium would have been obvious for reasons of record. In light that the after final amendments are not entered and that most arguments are directed to non-entered subject matter, for reasons of record the claims remain rejected under the ground of 35 USC 102/103 and 103 for the selected dependent claims of record.
